Hello all,

Wow I can't believe how close we are to ending the second quarter or first semester depending on how you look at it. With the holidays quickly approaching I hope you all take time to relax and enjoy your family and friends. I know this can be a stressful time of year but it's so important to keep the strong routine up at home. Remember to check those backpacks look for homework and communication from your school. Set aside time to help your kiddo with homework, read a book together and just visit about the day, ask questions, listen to what they are saying, we as adults can learn so much from our children if we just listen. Keep open communication with your school staff, they are here to help. It's important if you have questions ask them when you have them don't let them wait and possibly turn into bigger questions.

I want to take a minute to say how thankful I am to get to be a part of your life and some of your kiddos at school. Thanks for taking the time to read my tidbits. Thanks for all you do at home to help your child succeed.

I hope everyone had a happy Thanksgiving and will have a Merry Christmas.

December 3rd is National Day of Disabilities
